"I was just as the model at the point of my shoulder and arm, and three veterinarians told me that I was incurable, but I used Kendall's Spavin Cure according to instruction and in less than two weeks I was able to do my work. I also paid for the cure $225.00 for that matter. I don't say I cured myself, but I have found it wonderful. I don't think I have ever had anything so good for everything in the animal line."—Dr. J. EXPRESSION OF DEEP SYMPATHY

But Germany Blames Britain For Loss of American Lives

DUE TO STARVATION BLOCKADE

Berlin Note Expresses Regret That Americans Relied Upon England's Promises Instead of German Warnings—Bernstorff Calls on Bryan and Expresses Regret For Deaths

The German government cabled to the state department at Washington an expression of the deepest sympathy over the loss of American lives through the destruction of the Lusitania. Germany, however, reiterates her declaration that the responsibility rests with the British government.

The message is to be transmitted to the United States through the embassy at Washington. It declares that all Germany sympathizes with America in the loss of American citizens, but that the real responsibility rests with England's starvation blockade.

British merchant vessels, which generally are armed, the message of condolence says, have so frequently tried to ram submarines that a previous search is impossible, and hence they cannot be treated like ordinary merchantmen.

The official German statement further states that the English press has admitted that on her previous voyage the Lusitania carried large quantities of war material and that it is admitted that among her cargo on the last trip was 4500 cases of small arms ammunition. It is also pointed out that the most of the liner's cargo was chiefly contraband.

Continuing, the German statement says: "If England, after repeated official and unofficial warnings, considered herself able to declare that the boat ran no risk, thus lightheartedly assuming the responsibility for human lives, Germany, despite her heartfelt sympathy over the loss of American lives, cannot but regret that Americans felt more inclined to trust England's promises rather than to pay attention to warnings from the German side."

SITUATION TEMPERED

Gloom Somewhat Dispelled by Bernstorff's Call on Bryan

German Ambassador von Bernstorff called on Secretary Bryan and expressed "deep regret that the events of the war had led to the loss of so many American lives."

After a half hour's conference between Bernstorff and Bryan, the statement was made by mutual agreement, given out by the secretary:

"The German ambassador called at the state department and expressed his deep regret that the events of the war had led to the loss of so many American lives."

One point seems settled for the administration in connection with the Lusitania case:

Germany evidently is not seeking to provoke trouble with the United States. Fears were expressed at first that the Kaiser would assume a haughty or at least indifferent attitude concerning the death of Americans on the liner.

Officialdom does not pretend that this eliminates the difficulties ahead, but it is agreed that it opens the way for calm consideration of the case between the Washington and Berlin governments.

HOPES TO AVOID WAR

America Will Set Peace Example to the World, Says President

President Wilson gave to a gathering of 4000 naturalized Americans at Philadelphia the first intimation of the course which the United States government probably will pursue in the situation resulting from the loss of more than 100 lives on the British liner Lusitania.

He spoke by implication, but his hearers interpreted his remarks as meaning that, while the United States would remain at peace, it would seek to convince Germany of the injustice to mankind of the tragedy of last Friday.

"America," said the president, "must have the consciousness that on all sides it touches elbow and touches heart with all the nations of mankind. The example of America must be a special example, and must be an example not merely of peace because it will not fight, but because peace is a healing and elevating influence of the world and strife is not. 'There is such a thing as a man being too proud to fight. There is such a thing as being so right that it does not need to convince others by force that it is right.'"

These remarks precipitated a tumult of applause and patriotic enthusiasm, ending by the waving of thousands of small American flags.

AUSTRO-ITALIAN BREACH NEAR

London Expects Definite Word at Almost Any Moment

BATTLE RACING IN THE WEST

Known to Be of Desperate Character and Widespread Extent—No Proof of "Sweeping Victory" by Teutons in Western Galicia—Russians Admit Loss of Part of Libau

According to advices received in London the Italian government, with 600,000 fighting men entrenched on the frontier, with all classes called to the colors and with everything prepared for aggressive war, awaits the final reply of Austria. Unless it arrives within twenty-four hours, or if it is unfavorable, Italy will consider the negotiations terminated.

In the meantime the publication of important decrees which were signed at the last meeting of the Italian cabinet has been withheld.

The echoes of the Lusitania tragedy, the possibility of the United States becoming involved in the war as a result of the death of more than a hundred of her citizens and the Italy-Austria negotiations are being more widely discussed than the news from the front, although there has been a big battle along the whole line of the western front, from Arras to Lille.

That this battle has been of desperate character and widespread extent is made certain both by the Berlin and Paris official statements.

As yet the Teutons have failed to afford incontrovertible proof of their "sweeping victory" in western Galicia. Although it may be readily conceded that the Russian line between the Vistula and the Carpathians has been pushed back, there is no evidence of any wholesale disaster to the Russian arms, nor that the czar has been forced to yield his hold on the heights to the east of Dukla pass.

An indication of the slowing up of the Teutonic offensive may be seen in the Berlin and Vienna reports. The German communication has the pursuit of the Russians continuing in the same spot in which the said pursuit was going on last Saturday, namely, across the Wisloka river, while the Austrian statement repeats the story of the driving of all Russians from Hungarian soil.

On the other hand, Petrograd says the Austrian attacks in the direction of Mezo Laborcz, which lies in northern Hungary, have been repulsed and that the German assaults in western Galicia are less frequent, although carried on with undiminished fury.

The German invasion of the Baltic provinces seems to have reached its height with the capture of the port of Libau, which Petrograd has conceded. Berlin admits that the German advance divisions to the south of Libau are avoiding the enemy, while the Russian report indicates that a serious reverse has been inflicted on the enemy in this region.

In all probability the German operations here were designed more or less as a diversion to tempt the Russians to withdraw heavy forces of troops from other and more vital points on the eastern battle line.
